

CURRENT HISTORY

March 2021

Vol. 120, No. 824

CONTENTS

- 87 European Social Policy Embraces Solidarity in a Crisis Kimberly J. Morgan
Robust welfare systems preserved jobs and ensured universal health care, but the pandemic exposed gaps and the need for a revitalized social compact for a changing labor market.
- 93 Did the EU's Crisis Response Meet the Moment? Erik Jones
European leaders announced bold plans to mitigate the economic damage from pandemic lockdowns, though political differences over the rule of law threatened to derail the rescue.
- 100 The Exclusion of Roma and European Citizenship. Julija Sardelić
The European Union's efforts to end mistreatment of Roma citizens in its eastern member states have stumbled while overlooking similar discrimination and neglect in longer-established countries.
- 105 Why Greeks and Turks Fight Costas M. Constantinou
National myths of emancipatory violence have kept the old foes locked in conflict over Cyprus. Now they are also at odds over rights to territorial waters in the Eastern Mediterranean.
- 112 The EU's Stealthy Hegemony and Ambiguous Neighbors Alexander Clarkson
From Kaliningrad to Transnistria, and from Cyprus to Northern Ireland, the EU has exerted growing influence over misfit border territories in spite of neighboring powers seeking to retain control.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 118 Brexit's Hidden Costs for Britons Living in the EU Michaela Benson
Brexiters' politicization of inward migration obscured the fact that over a million British citizens have settled in Europe. They are now in limbo.
- BOOKS
- 121 Whose Absolutism? Holly Case
Frederick the Great was an Enlightenment philosophe who also happened to be an absolute monarch. His writings now raise pointed questions about forms of rule in contemporary Europe and beyond.