CONTENTS

- 167 COVID-19 in Ebola’s Wake:
Safe Haven in Sierra Leone? Adia Benton
Lessons from the Ebola epidemic may have helped prepare the West African country for the coronavirus—though speculation about African survival only underscores American failures.
- 172 The African Union Makes Its Mark in the Pandemic Thomas Kwasi Tiekou
The organization played a crucial role in averting the most dire scenarios. A new spirit of pan-Africanism and effective multilateral coordination guided the response.
- 178 Spatial Injustice in Johannesburg
in the Time of COVID-19 Caroline Wanjiku Kihato, Sarah de Villiers, Sumayya Mohamed, and Bonolo Mohulatsi
In a neighborhood of informal housing for the poor, deprived of basic services, locals and immigrants alike barely eke out a living—and have few chances to escape.
- 183 A Hashtag Revolution in Nigeria Ebenezer Obadare
Exasperation with police brutality and a general excess of violence sparked a social media-driven protest movement, as entertainers stepped forward to fill a leadership vacuum.
- 189 Tanzania’s Authoritarian Turn:
Less Sudden Than It Seems Felicitas Becker
The president and ruling party revived the nationalist rhetoric of the nation’s founding father, putting an end to a relatively democratic era of freewheeling public debate.
- PERSPECTIVE
- 196 An African Trade Revolution Takes Shape Benjamin Talton
A new continental free trade area is an opportunity for African leaders to turn from exploitive resource extraction to people-centered development. The United States can lend a hand.
- BOOKS
- 200 Who Is an African Jew? William F. S. Miles
A study of a southern African community’s claims to Jewish ancestry probes the uses of genetic testing to foster claims of identity. Actual religious practice is another matter.
- FROM THE ARCHIVES
- 203 Will African Federalism Work?; African Unity 12 Years Later Rayford W. Logan and Richard E. Bissell
Excerpts from Current History essays published in the 1960s and 1970s.
